

Music is an important part of any culture. People all over the world sing to express themselves, carry on traditions that have been passed down through generations, and to help them get through their day. Unfortunately, it can be hard for people to find songs in their native language when they are not able to speak it fluently or read the lyrics. For example, if you are learning Telugu and don't know much about Hinduism or Sanskrit, you wouldn't be able to find many songs with translations. And if you can't find those songs, it will be even more difficult to find those which are in your native language. So here is a list compiled of some of the best Telugu songs with their English translation as well as an option for you to sing along as you listen. This list is broken up into two sections: 1) Contemporary Indian Classical Music 2) Modern Bollywood Hits

When a massive earthquake hit Nepal in April 2015, people around the world rushed to help. Many celebrities donated time and money towards the cause and organized numerous donations to help those who needed it most. Here are just a few of the songs that were written to honor the people who lost their lives.

NEWS & ANALYSIS • People donate more to Nepalese earthquake victims than to any other country in the world - UNICEF • Nepal earthquake death toll rises to 8,000 - World Health Organization • 2008 Population Census showed that there are 22.7 crore people in India. The 2008 census was the last one that counted India's population as completely Hindu because it didn't count Hindus under this religion. This means that according to the census, Hindus are 1/3 of India's population. Others, who do not follow Hinduism, make up another 1/3 of India's population. This means that the remaining population follows the religion of Islam, Christianity, Buddhism, Sikhism, etc. • A new census will be conducted in India next year which will have different religious categories for each religion. This will be the first time that Hindus have been counted under their own religion in a census. • The Muslim population in India is about 15% of the country's total population • There are over 1000 languages spoken in India today • The average person in India speaks 3 languages - about one Indian language they are comfortable speaking and two regional dialects they are comfortable speaking. The majority of the world's population is made up of "Hindi" speakers. And even though Hindi is not an official language, it is used as the lingua franca of North India. English (mostly) and Hindi are spoken by Indians in South Asia, countries like Nepal, Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, etc.
